At the Burtis.

Anna Held, bringing those famous eyes that "just won't behave," and her own company, is coming to the Burtis, Davenport, next Saturday, matinee and night, in her latest musical comedy success, "Follow Me," in which she returned to the American stage last season at the Casino, New York, after two years spent in her native work in France. Despite the sorrows she has encountered she returns the same bright and vivacious artist with her numberless little mannerisms which have endeared her to the American public. "Follow Me" tells of a marquis who has fallen a victim to the charms of a fascinating actress. The marquis has a marquise, but he loves to browse and gratifies his whims to the limit. Strings of pearls and huge bouquets of costly flowers are some of the tributes he lays at beauty's feet, but his wife learns of his actions and proceeds to check them. She goes to the actress, the object of his blandishments, and from her learns the art of winning men. She tries the scheme on her husband with most satisfactory results and all is well. Anna Held is the sole owner of the production, and it is therefore not surprising that it should score as a fashion show also, for such it is as well as a highly entertaining musical offering. The French star, whose ideas of dress and scenic creations have always been a factor in attractions in which she has appeared, designed all the scenery as well as the gowns, and the result is an amazing harmony of color, which runs riot with clean fun and numerous song hits throughout the three acts, the scenes of which are laid in Paris and in which chorus girls of exceptional beauty deport themselves in an almost endless procession of unique and bizarre creations.

At the Majestic.

Julian Eltinge, the clever feminine impersonator, who for the past few years has been the sensation of the theatrical world, had many strange and amusing experiences in making his first photoplay which he made for Paramount. This is "The Countess Charming," written by Carolyn Wells and Gelett Burgess. "The Countess Charming" will be shown at the Majestic Theatre today and Friday. Julian Eltinge, being accustomed to the shelter of the theatre, at first would not be induced to walk out into the open air in broad daylight clad in a woman's evening gown. The first day he was seen in the lobby, and Mr. Eltinge had been nail-bitten and was to wear a ball gown. The dressing room was some two hundred feet from the portion of the studio where the set was built. Mr. Crisp called him in to come over. Mr. Eltinge stuck a carefully coiffed head out of the dressing room window, removed a pipe from his mouth and said: "Not on your life! I wouldn't walk across that place in this get-up for a million dollars!" Finally, however, after much arguing, Mr. Eltinge consented to appear, but threw a heavy dressing gown over his costume.

At Spencer Square.

Winifred Allen, Triangle's "idol girl," is featured in "The Haunted House," produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan, which is exhibited at the Spencer theatre today. She appears as a little girl of a New England village who knows the "spirits" and communes with them. Near the town is an old mansion inhabited by a ghost. When a young robber seeks refuge there from his pursuers he makes the acquaintance of this ghost, and a strange romance ensues, when the "ghost" casts off the white robes and becomes very human. On Friday and Saturday the Spencer Square will offer "The Countess Charming," also in this or any other city. It is "Should She Obey," a play written around one of the oldest and most important of the domestic problems, namely divorce.

At the Burtis.

The Play That Startled All Chicago

It points the way to freedom from the customs of barbarism which have wrecked the lives of millions of women. It lays bare the glaring facts of poisoned marriage and divorce, which are destroying America's home life; facts revealed by the Illinois marriage and divorce commission, headed by Judge Marcus A. Kavanaugh, and the Illinois Senate Vice Committee.

Don't Miss This True Story From Actual Life

Critics declare the story to be the American "Les Misérables." It is not a sex problem play. It is a clean, forceful story from real life. It reveals actual heart-wives of American millionaires—wives who have killed the very souls of their husbands.
